REFERENCE PACK: MARCUS VANE & THE SOVEREIGN STOREFRONT
Dummy client context file for the AI Systems Specialist build assessment

Client: Marcus Vane (fictional) | Product: The Sovereign Storefront | Front-End: $1 trial workshop | Compliance: No earnings claims

00 — READ ME FIRST

This is a 100% fictional client. Marcus Vane, The Sovereign Storefront, every named person, statistic, testimonial, URL, and dollar figure in this document is invented for assessment purposes only. None of it refers to a real client, person, or product. It exists to give the candidate a realistic, self-contained body of client context to build their ideation and scripting pipeline against.

For the build: treat everything below as if it were true and verified about this client. This pack is the single source of truth. The AI must never invent a name, result, statistic, or proof point that does not appear here. Compliance is non-negotiable: no income or earnings claims of any kind.

01 — SNAPSHOT

Marcus Vane is a former wholesale-logistics manager turned e-commerce mentor who teaches ordinary people to build a "boring but durable" online consignment storefront reselling overstock and returned inventory from regional liquidators. The model is positioned as the calm, unglamorous opposite of dropshipping hype. The #1 audience is 38–60 mid-career people who feel financially exposed and have been burned by flashier "online business" programs. The killer USP is the verified liquidator-network access plus a done-with-you cataloguing system, where Marcus earns a placement fee from the liquidators when a student's store actually moves inventory, not from the student up front.

• Client: Marcus Vane (fictional)
• Product: The Sovereign Storefront / Vane Reseller Method
• Front-End Offer: $1 two-hour "First Pallet" trial workshop
• Headline USP: The only reseller program with vetted regional-liquidator access, where Marcus gets paid a placement fee only when your store actually moves product
• #1 Audience: 38–60, financially exposed, burned by hype-driven online business courses
• Core Emotion: Earned Calm (relief that something is finally boring and real)
• Funnel: Ad → sovereignstorefront.dummy/first-pallet → workshop → core program upsell
• Primary Upsell: $1,450 Sovereign Storefront Core; $6,800 Liquidator Concierge (90 days)
• Tone: Plainspoken, unhurried, anti-hype, operationally specific
• Scale Proof: 9,400+ enrolled; 11 vetted regional liquidator partners; 5 years running

• Market Stage: Stage 4 (refined mechanism), moving toward Stage 5
• Hard Compliance: No income/earnings claims, ever. Never name a liquidator partner in ads.

02 — CLIENT IDENTITY

Who Marcus Is
Marcus Vane spent 14 years managing a regional wholesale logistics depot before building a reselling education business. He is positioned as the un-guru: no sports cars, no rented mansions, no urgency theatre. The brand personality is the operator who got tired of watching people get sold a fantasy and decided to teach the unglamorous version that actually holds up. He leans into the audience's skepticism, explains the economics openly, and lets the mechanism carry the sale.

Origin Story
The online-business education space is full of programs selling "passive" stores stuffed with random imported products nobody asked for. Marcus spent over a decade on the warehouse side of retail and knew the unsexy truth: there is a constant, predictable river of overstock and customer-returned inventory that regional liquidators need to clear, and they will pay placement fees to move it through reliable small storefronts. So he flipped the usual model. Instead of charging students thousands to guess at "winning products," he built relationships with vetted liquidators who pay him when student storefronts actually move their inventory. The incentives are aligned by structure: if students' stores do not move product, Marcus does not get paid.

Credentials (all fictional, treat as verified)
• 14 years as a regional wholesale logistics manager
• 11 vetted regional liquidator partnerships under signed placement agreements
• 5 years running the Sovereign Storefront program
• 9,400+ enrolled members across the US, Canada, UK, and Australia
• Featured speaker at the (fictional) 2024 Midwest Reseller Summit
• Named one of "30 Operators to Watch" by the fictional trade outlet Backroom Logistics Weekly

USP / Killer Feature
Full USP: The only reseller program backed by vetted regional-liquidator access and a done-with-you cataloguing system, where Marcus is paid a placement fee by the liquidators when your store moves product, so his income depends on your store actually working.
Killer feature: The Liquidator Match sheet. A weekly-refreshed list of the overstock and returned-inventory lots regional partners most need to clear, matched to store types, so members start with inventory that already has demand behind it instead of guessing at trends.

The #1 Burning Customer Problem
They want a second income that does not depend on their employer, but every "online business" they have tried felt like a casino dressed up as a business, and they have stopped trusting their own judgment because that judgment already cost them money. The wound is not only financial. It is the quiet belief that they are not the kind of person who can pull this off.

Three Additional Core Problems

1. Product paralysis. They do not know what to sell and freeze. The Liquidator Match sheet removes the guess: the demand exists before the store does.
2. Operational overwhelm. Listings, pricing, returns, fulfillment logistics feel like a second job. The done-with-you cataloguing system and templates compress it.
3. Cost-of-entry fear. They cannot stomach losing another few thousand dollars on inventory that does not move. The placement-fee model and the $1 trial cap the downside.

Positioning vs Competitors

- Guru: Makes money when YOU pay, win or lose → Marcus: Paid by liquidators only when your store moves product
- Guru: Sells a course; you still guess at products → Marcus: Weekly Liquidator Match sheet of inventory with demand behind it
- Guru: Promises figures and "financial freedom" → Marcus: Refuses income claims; says anyone who makes them shouldn't be trusted
- Guru: Random imported products, no supply edge → Marcus: Vetted regional liquidator network under signed agreements
- Guru: Disappears after the sale → Marcus: Income depends on stores moving product, so support is self-correcting
- Guru: Lambos, mansions, hype → Marcus: Calm, plainspoken, warehouse-floor realism

Competitive Landscape

- Dropshipping course gurus — $1,000–$3,000 courses on imported-product stores. Weakness: you still guess at products, high failure, hype-fatigued audience, no supply edge.
- Amazon FBA programs — $2,000–$5,000, sourcing + private label. Weakness: high capital, long ramp, account-suspension risk.
- Generic "flip stuff online" content — free YouTube / paid mini-courses. Weakness: no reliable supply, no system, scattershot.
- Marcus Vane / Sovereign Storefront — liquidator-backed reseller stores, placement-fee model. Weakness: expectation/support/upsell gaps from early reviews (addressable in copy).

Ethical Notes

The mechanism is structurally sound: liquidator placement fees are a real category, and Marcus only earns when stores move inventory. No earnings claims are made. The most common real complaints cluster around three addressable things: (1) expectation mismatch, some expected fully passive income and found it took weekly effort; (2) upsell friction, some felt the $1 workshop was a doorway to the $1,450 core; (3) onboarding lag, some waited too long for liquidator matching in the early cohorts. The copy fix is explicit expectation-setting.

03 — AUDIENCE

Demographics
• Age: 38–60 (core 45–55)
• Gender: roughly 50/50, slight male skew (55/45)
• Household income: $48K–$95K
• Employment: full-time (60%), self-employed/contractor (20%), semi-retired (20%)
• Tech literacy: low to moderate
• Location: US, Canada, UK, Australia; suburban and exurban
• Common backgrounds: warehouse/logistics workers, retail managers, contractors, office admins, ex-military, early retirees
• Prior online-business attempts: 1–3 (avg ~2)

Psychographics
Practical, tired of hype, want something they can explain to their spouse without embarrassment. Skeptical of anything that sounds "passive" or "easy." Value durability over upside. Want breathing room, not a yacht. Already burned by at least one flashier program and quietly carrying the cost of it.

Awareness Level
Solution-aware to product-aware on entry, but scarred. They know online stores and reselling exist. They are filtering every offer through "what's the catch this time?" They will not respond to hype; they respond to plain mechanics, verifiable structure, and a downside they can see is capped.

Avatar Tiers
• Ideal buyer: the methodical skeptic who values structure (Ray). High upsell likelihood once the mechanism proves out.
• Core volume buyer: the burned mid-career earner who needs trust rebuilt first (Dana). Moderate upsell.
• Aspirational/low-budget: the anxious near-retiree (Lorraine). Low initial upsell, high reassurance need.
• Efficiency buyer: the time-strapped contractor who wants a system, not a hobby (Theo). High upsell.

Five Avatar Profiles
1. Dana, the Burned Earner (49). Suburban Ohio, $58K, married, two teens, basic tech skills. Spent ~$2,400 on a dropshipping course she never finished. Spouse skeptical. Wants supplemental income, not to quit her job. Inner dialogue: "Another store thing. The last one cost me two grand and a lot of pride." Key phrase: "What's the catch this time?"
2. Lorraine, the Anxious Near-Retiree (58). Rural England, semi-retired, $40K fixed-ish income, widowed, low tech skills. Worried her savings won't stretch. Wants a small, real project with dignity. Inner dialogue: "He didn't promise me a fortune. That's the first honest thing I've heard in one of these." Key phrase: "Can someone like me actually do this?"

3. Theo, the Time-Strapped Contractor (41). Texas, $85K, married, moderate tech skills. No spare hours, wants a system that runs on evenings. Inner dialogue: "I don't have six months to mess around. Show me the steps." Key phrase: "Will this waste my time?"
4. Ray, the Methodical Skeptic (46). Urban Canada, $96K, analytical, reads the fine print, looks for the catch. Inner dialogue: "If he gets paid by the liquidators, the incentives line up. That's either smart or honest. Either way it holds." Key phrase: "Walk me through the economics."
5. Marisol, the Restarting Parent (44). Arizona, one income, kids in school, former office admin, wants to contribute again. Inner dialogue: "I used to be good at something. I want a thing that's mine again." Key phrase: "Is this something I could be proud of?"

Co-Dominant Limiting Beliefs
Hopeless (dominant): "Nothing like this works for me." Each prior failure reinforced that the problem is them, not the method. Helpless (strong secondary): "I don't know how, and it's too complicated." Worthless (tertiary): "Something real isn't for people like me." The copy lever for Hopeless is the mechanism reframe: the prior offers were built to fail you, not the other way around.

NHB Market Criteria Summary
• Sophistication: Stage 4 (refined mechanism) moving toward Stage 5 (identity)
• Beliefs: Hopeless (dominant), Helpless (secondary), Worthless (tertiary)
• Process Preference: ~85% Procedural. Wants exact steps, not options
• Market Position: WHO stage: "Who do I trust?"
• Direction: 60% Away / 40% Towards. Open Away, move to Towards by the offer
• Reference Style: ~80% External. Trusts verifiable structure, not their own judgment
• Stress Response: Thinking primary, Logical secondary, Feeling tertiary
• Convincer: Visual 70%, Kinesthetic 20%, Auditory 10%. Frequency 3–5 exposures
• Core Emotion: Earned Calm
• Hierarchy: Security first (buffer, fear of shortfall), then dignity/respect, then belonging

The 4 Types of Problems (ranked)
Copy energy: 50% Psychological, 25% Mathematical, 15% Sociological, 10% Physiological.
1. Psychological — Feels like a failure for prior attempts; distrusts own judgment. Solution: a boring, verifiable mechanism removes the "am I being fooled again" load.
2. Mathematical — Cannot risk more capital on inventory that won't move. Solution: $1 trial + placement-fee model caps downside; demand exists before the store.
3. Sociological — Spouse skepticism; embarrassment about past attempts. Solution: 9,400+ members = community; "boring and real" is defensible at the dinner table.
4. Physiological — Tired from main job; no energy for a second job. Solution: evening-sized weekly workload, templates, done-with-you cataloguing.

Deep Internal Monologues
1. "I feel stupid for the last one. I saw the red flags and wanted it to work anyway."
2. "I'm 52. The runway feels short and the savings feel thin."
3. "If I bring home another flop, my spouse stops taking me seriously."

4. "I don't trust myself to pick the thing. That's the part that scares me."
5. "I don't need a fortune. I need to stop doing the math at the gas pump."

7 Core Desires
Security (a buffer that doesn't depend on the employer), Freedom from fear (no more being someone's mark), Dignity (a thing that's mine), Social approval (spouse stops worrying), Comfort (evenings, not all-nighters), To win quietly (a real store, not a hobby), Care of loved ones (a little more for the family).

What They're Really Buying
Not a store. They are buying restored trust in their own judgment, a downside small enough to survive, and the chance to point at one real, working thing and say "I did this." The store is the vehicle. The transformation from "person who got burned" to "person who quietly runs something real" is the product.

Subconscious Safety System (fires on every ad)
1. Structural transparency. They need to understand WHY the economics work before they accept THAT they work.
2. Aligned incentives. They must believe Marcus only wins if they win.
3. Process proof, not outcome claims. They distrust income claims instinctively. "11 vetted partners, 5 years" is checkable.
4. Zero hype. Any guru-energy sentence triggers rejection.
5. Capped downside. They must see the most they can lose, and that it is small.

Awareness Journey Stages (Dana, illustrative)
• Unaware: "I want a second income but I don't know where to start."
• Problem-Aware: "Every online store thing wants thousands up front and I still pick the products."
• Solution-Aware: "Reselling? I've seen those ads. They're all the same flip-and-pray pitch."
• Product-Aware: "Wait, the liquidators pay him? And the inventory already has demand? That changes the math."
• Most-Aware: "It's a dollar to look. The downside is a coffee. I have nothing to lose by watching."

Objection Table
• I'm not tech-savvy → The cataloguing system and templates do the heavy lifting; if you can use email and a phone camera, you can run a listing.
• I don't know what to sell → The weekly Liquidator Match sheet tells you what regional partners need to move. Demand comes first.
• I got burned before → Those programs got paid the moment you bought. Marcus gets paid by liquidators only when your store moves product.
• It costs too much to start → The workshop is $1. You see the whole mechanism before you decide anything.
• Is this a scam? → We make no income claims. Anyone who promises you a figure should not be trusted; it isn't even legal.

• I don't have time → It's an evenings model. Templates and matching replace the parts that used to eat weekends.
• I'm too old for this → The core membership skews 45–55. This is built for people exactly your age, not 22-year-olds.
• What if the inventory doesn't sell? → The match sheet starts you with lots that have demand behind them; that's the entire point of the liquidator relationship.

5 Aspects of Personality (by copy weight)
1. Things (highest): a real store, a weekly match sheet, templates, the cataloguing system, a partner network they can name to themselves.
2. Activity: running and restocking a store, not "learning a course." Light, evening-sized.
3. People: 9,400+ ordinary members, who they become (a quiet operator), who validates it (the partner network).
4. Place: the kitchen table after dinner, a corner of the garage with a few labeled bins.
5. Information (lowest): they've consumed enough courses. Information should serve action only.

04 — OFFER

Front-End Offer and Value Stack
Price: $1 trial workshop. Why so cheap: the downside has to be visibly small for a burned audience. Site: sovereignstorefront.dummy/first-pallet.
• "First Pallet" 2-hour live workshop — stated value $299 — walks the full mechanism end to end, live
• Liquidator Match sample sheet — $149 — one week of real matched inventory lots to inspect
• Store Starter template kit — $199 — listing, pricing, and returns templates
• The "Boring Economics" workbook — $99 — the unit math of a single moved lot, no projections
• Total stated value: $746 for $1

Core Mechanism (step by step)
1. Regional liquidators always have overstock and returned inventory they must clear (verifiable category).
2. They pay placement fees to move that inventory through reliable small storefronts (the model).
3. Marcus holds vetted agreements with 11 regional partners (the edge).
4. Members get a weekly match sheet of lots with existing demand, so they don't guess (the de-risk).
5. Marcus is paid by the liquidators only when member stores move product, so quality is self-correcting (aligned incentive).

Hormozi Value Equation
• Dream Outcome: MODERATE-HIGH — a real, durable second income stream; deliberately not "get rich"
• Perceived Likelihood: MODERATE-HIGH — verifiable structure + capped downside; no income claims, so they imagine upside themselves
• Time Delay: MODERATE — honest about a ramp; first matched lot within the first weeks, not first day
• Effort & Sacrifice: LOW-MODERATE — evening-sized weekly work; templates and matching remove the worst of it

Guarantee / Anti-Guarantee
The device is the anti-claim: "I'm not going to tell you what you'll make, because I can't and nobody honestly can. I'll show you exactly how the machine works and you decide." In a market saturated with promises, the refusal to promise is itself the proof.

Upsell / Main Offer
• Sovereign Storefront Core — $1,450 — full cataloguing system, weekly match sheets, member community, store setup walkthroughs
• Liquidator Concierge (90 days) — $6,800 — direct team help with matching, listing, and scaling the store
• Alt Upsell 1 — $197 — extended template library
• Alt Upsell 2 — $497 — priority match-sheet access

Funnel Structure
Facebook / YouTube / TikTok ad → sovereignstorefront.dummy/first-pallet → $1 live or evergreen workshop (offer presented ~75 minutes in) → Core upsell → Concierge. Back-end: 5-day email sequence for non-buyers, then a weekly "match drop" nurture.

Scarcity & Urgency
Organic only. Liquidator lots genuinely refresh weekly, so "this week's matched inventory is current only if you start now" is real, not manufactured. No fake countdown theatre; it trips the scam alarm in this audience.

Primary CTA
"Watch the First Pallet workshop for $1. See exactly how it works, then decide." Alternates: "Grab a $1 seat" / "See this week's matched inventory."

05 — PROOF

Compliance rule: no income claims. No earnings-based testimonials. No revenue figures, income screenshots, or dollar amounts tied to what any member has made. Hard, non-negotiable client rule. All proof is process-based or structural. In this market, the refusal to make income claims is itself the strongest proof of legitimacy.

Marcus's Personal Credentials
14 years in regional wholesale logistics. 11 vetted liquidator partnerships. 5 years running the program. 9,400+ members. (All fictional, treat as verified.)

Program Scale
9,400+ enrolled members. 11 regional liquidator partners under signed placement agreements. Weekly match sheets running continuously for 5 years.

Named Testimonials (fictional, process-based, no earnings)
• Dana R. — Office admin, Ohio, 49, burned by a prior dropshipping course: "I was sure this was another version of the thing that cost me $2,400. Then he explained who actually pays him and it clicked. I have a real store now, not a folder of unwatched videos."
• Theo M. — Contractor, Texas, 41, no spare time: "I do my listings after the kids are down. The match sheet means I'm not staring at a screen wondering what to sell."
• Lorraine P. — Semi-retired, England, 58, very low tech confidence: "I'm not a computer person and I got my first lot listed with the template. The fact he never promised me money is exactly why I trusted him."
• Ray C. — Analyst, Canada, 46, skeptic: "I went in looking for the catch. The catch is that you have to actually do the weekly work. The economics hold up, which is more than I can say for the last three."
• Marisol V. — Restarting parent, Arizona, 44: "I wanted something that was mine again. I've got a little corner of the garage with labeled bins and a store with my name on it. That's the part that got me."

The 5 testimonial criteria types (use as selection filters): process proof, skepticism overcome, simplicity confirmed, quality/dignity validated, structural difference recognized. Disqualifying red flags: any mention of dollars earned, revenue, profit, income, "made my money back," "passive income," or anything the FTC could read as an earnings claim.

Why It's Hard to Attack
Every headline claim is structural and checkable: the liquidator category is real, the partnership count is stated, the 5-year run is verifiable, the incentive alignment is self-correcting rather than a promise. And the refusal to make income claims preempts the audience's primary scam reflex. There is no soft underbelly of unverifiable hype.

"Ordinary People" Relatability Strategy
Because earnings claims are banned, relatability does the emotional lifting income proof normally would. Show people exactly like the avatar (40+, skeptical, tired of hype) who now run a real, boring, working store, framed around process and feeling, never money.

Social Proof (reviews)
Treat external review proof as a weak asset for now; lead with verifiable structural proof (partner count, years running, member count).

What the Market Likes
Low-cost entry. Done-with-you over do-it-yourself. Honesty about effort and ramp. Proof they can verify (partner count, years running). The "boring and real" framing.

What the Market Dislikes
Income claims (instant distrust). Guru energy. Upsell avalanches. Vague "it's easy" promises. Slow support after the sale.

---

06 — VOICE & TONE

Brand Tone
Plainspoken, unhurried, operationally specific, anti-hype. Marcus talks like a warehouse manager explaining how something actually works, not a salesman pushing a dream. He leans into skepticism, explains the mechanism, and lets the structure sell.

Core Tone Attributes
• Specific over vague — "a matched lot of returned power tools," not "winning products."
• Operator, not guru — "I ran a depot for 14 years," not "I cracked the code."
• Honest about effort — "this takes a few evenings a week, and I won't pretend otherwise."
• Calm — no all-caps, no exclamation storms, no urgency theatre.
• Mechanism-first — explain why it's cheap before asking for anything.

Signature Phrases (Marcus's own words, fictional)
• "The liquidators pay me. You don't, not until the thing is already working for you."
• "This is boring on purpose. Boring is what survives."
• "I'm not going to tell you a number. Anyone who tells you a number is either lying or about to be sued."
• "The inventory has demand before your store exists. That's the whole trick, and it isn't a trick."
• "A few evenings a week. I'm not going to insult you by calling it passive."
• "If you've been burned, good. It means you'll actually read the fine print this time."

Avatar Language (use these words)
"Burned," "what's the catch," "boring," "real," "durable," "a thing that's mine," "evenings," "matched lot," "the liquidators pay him," "I never finished the last one," "second income," "breathing room," "no fortune, just steady."

What Customers Are Called
"Members." Never students, never customers.

Hard Rules / OFF Brand

• NO income or earnings claims of any kind. NO dollar figures tied to what a member could make.
• Never name a specific liquidator partner in ads (refer to "vetted regional partners" or "the partner network").
• No implying Marcus earns from the member directly; the model is liquidators pay him on movement.
• No hype, guru energy, get-rich-quick language, lambo/mansion imagery.
• No fake countdowns or "X spots left" unless a cohort cap is genuinely real.
• No promising "passive." The honest frame is "a few evenings a week."

Language To Use vs Avoid
• Mechanism — USE: "the liquidators pay me," "demand before the store," "my income depends on yours working" — AVOID: "earn," "make $X," "passive income," "revenue," "profit"
• Process — USE: "here's exactly how it works," "a few evenings a week," "the match sheet" — AVOID: "set it and forget it," "while you sleep"
• Proof — USE: "11 vetted partners," "5 years running," "9,400+ members" — AVOID: unverifiable superlatives, income testimonials
• Trust — USE: "I won't give you a number; anyone who does shouldn't be trusted" — AVOID: "I'll show you my secret," "guaranteed results"
• Emotion — USE: "breathing room," "a thing that's yours," "steady," "not stuck" — AVOID: "financial freedom," "quit your job," "Lambo"
• Effort — USE: "boring on purpose," "real work, evening-sized" — AVOID: "effortless," "automatic," "no work required"

Stress Response Patterns
Thinking + Logical (primary): pre-answer every question so they don't have to wonder. Keep the chain unbroken: liquidators have overstock → they pay to move it → Marcus is paid only on movement → so quality is self-correcting. Feeling (secondary): small, true emotional pictures (the labeled bins, the store with their name on it), never extravagant ones.

Convincer Strategy
Visual (70%): the match sheet on screen, a real listing being built, the warehouse/depot setting. Kinesthetic (20%): the workshop is the experience; they watch the machine run. Auditory (10%): Marcus's calm, unhurried voice sounds unlike every guru they've heard. Frequency: stack 5+ proof elements per touchpoint (11 partners, 5 years, 9,400 members, signed agreements, weekly match sheet, the depot background).

07 — HOOKS & ANGLES

This audience is solution-aware but scarred, so cold opens lead with the internal state and let the offer arrive late as the resolution they're already reaching for. Four emotional families below; underneath all of them the compliance rule holds without exception. We sell the feeling of being burned, stuck, or behind. We never sell the feeling of being rich.

Family 1: Identity & Belonging
• 1.1 The Watcher: "There's a version of you that keeps watching other people start the thing you keep meaning to start. Someday has a way of never showing up." Static: phone glow on a face at night — "STILL WATCHING. STILL WAITING."
• 1.2 Prove Them Right or Wrong: "Someone in your life has quietly decided you won't follow through on this. The hard part is you're starting to believe them." Static: two coffee cups, one empty chair.
• 1.3 Not Too Late: "Somewhere you decided this kind of thing is for younger people. Funny, because the people quietly doing it are usually closer to your age." Static: reading glasses on a closed laptop.
• 1.4 People Like Me: "You assume everyone doing this is some 25-year-old. Most of them are warehouse guys and tired admins who didn't feel ready either." Static: candid 40–60 faces, no gloss.
• 1.5 A Thing That's Yours: "It was never really about a fortune. It was about having one real thing with your name on it." Static: labeled bins in a garage corner.

Family 2: Cost of Inaction & Fear
• 2.1 Another Year Gone: "Think back to exactly one year ago. Be honest about how much actually changed. A year moves whether you do or not." Static: a wall calendar mostly torn off.
• 2.2 The Math You Avoid: "There's a number you try not to think about, the one that says whether the next 20 years feel free or feel tight. Most people just stop doing the math."
• 2.3 Everything Costs More: "You feel it at the pump and the register. Everything keeps climbing. The one thing that hasn't moved in years is you." Static: a long grocery receipt.
• 2.4 The Safe No: "Doing nothing feels safe. That's exactly why it's the most expensive thing you'll do all year." Static: a closed front door, lights off.

Family 3: Story & Transformation (first person, as Marcus)
• 3.1 Burned, Then Found Something Real: "I watched people hand over thousands for courses that left them a login and nothing else. I got angry enough to build the boring opposite of that on purpose."
• 3.2 The Warehouse Truth: "I spent 14 years watching pallets of perfectly good returned stuff get written off. The whole time there were people at home wishing they had something real to sell."
• 3.3 The Quiet Win: "Nobody throws a party the day you list your first matched lot. But there's a quiet kind of proud that hits when you've done one real thing for once."
• 3.4 The Skeptic Who Was Right to Be: "I don't blame anyone for assuming this is another scam. Being suspicious is what kept you from getting burned twice. Until something finally didn't fit the pattern."

Family 4: Enemy / Contrarian
• 4.1 The Hype Machine: "There's a whole industry built on selling you the dream and charging you to find out it doesn't work that way. You've probably paid in at least once."

• 4.2 The Lie You Were Sold: "You were told it'd be easy. Pick a product, watch it sell itself, money while you sleep. So how did that actually go?"
• 4.3 Who's Actually Paying: "Anytime something is cheap or free, the smart question is who's really paying for it. Most people running these offers really don't want you to ask."
• 4.4 Us vs the Course Sellers: "Here's what nobody in this space says out loud: they got paid the second you bought. Whether you succeeded after that was your problem, not theirs. Mine is the opposite."

Counter-Argument Frame (Before / Event / After)
Before: "You're right to be suspicious. Most reseller and store programs were bait for an expensive course, because those companies made their money the moment you paid. Whether your store ever worked was beside the point."
Event: "Then a guy who ran a wholesale depot for 14 years realized the liquidators clearing all that overstock will pay placement fees to move it through reliable small stores. That flips the whole thing. The mentor gets paid by the liquidators, not by you, and only if stores actually move product."
After: "That's the structure he runs on. 11 vetted partners, 5 years, 9,400 members, a weekly match sheet of inventory that already has demand. He's never needed to promise anyone a number, because the number was never the point."
One-sentence counter: If the person handing you an online-store opportunity can't tell you who's actually writing their check, they're still running the old model, and you already know how that story ends.

Hooks by Belief (emotional entry)
• Hopeless: "If nothing's ever stuck for you, you've decided the problem is you. It usually isn't. It's how those things were built to fail you."
• Helpless: "The reason you froze last time wasn't that you're not smart enough. It's that they handed you a mountain and called it step one."
• Worthless: "You've started to wonder if people like you just don't get to have this. You're wrong, and a lot of people exactly like you are quietly proving it."

Hooks by Avatar (emotional entry)
• Dana (burned): "You're not the person who failed at this. You're the person who got handed things designed to fail."
• Lorraine (anxious near-retiree): "This was never about a fortune for you. It's about something that's yours and a little more breathing room."
• Theo (no time): "You don't have six months to mess around. The whole point is that the guessing part is already done for you."
• Ray (skeptic): "You look for the catch in everything, and you should. So don't take my word, look at who actually pays me and decide for yourself."
• Marisol (restarting parent): "You used to be good at something. This is a way to have a thing that's yours again."

LAB Profile Hooks

• Away: "You're done being someone's mark, done with the upsell waiting behind the cheap thing, done feeling stupid for hoping."
• Towards: "Picture being the kind of person who finally started something real this year, and meant it."
• External reference: "Don't trust my word. The liquidator model is a real category you can go read about today, before you believe a thing I say."
• Sameness with exception: "It's the same online store you've heard about for years. The only difference is where the inventory comes from and who's paying me."

Note on solution-led / procedural hooks: Mechanism-first and step-by-step hooks still convert at the bottom of the funnel where the prospect is product-aware. Reserve them for retargeting, mid-funnel, and the workshop itself. Use the emotional families above for cold traffic.

08 — SWIPE PHRASES

All fictional, sourced to this pack. Income/earnings language excluded by rule.

Headline-Level
• "The liquidators pay him. You don't, not until your store's already working."
• "Every 'online store' pitch you've seen wanted thousands up front and you still picked the products. This one's built backwards on purpose."
• "Boring on purpose. Boring is what survives."
• "A few evenings a week. He won't insult you by calling it passive."

Body Copy
• "He ran a wholesale depot for 14 years. He knows where the inventory actually comes from."
• "The demand exists before your store does. That's the whole trick, and it isn't a trick."
• "11 vetted regional partners. 5 years. 9,400 members. No promises about your wallet."
• "Watch the whole machine run for a dollar, then decide."

Proof / Credibility
• "14 years in regional wholesale logistics."
• "11 vetted liquidator partnerships under signed placement agreements."
• "5 years running, 9,400+ members."
• "His income depends on your store moving product. That's the alignment."

Objection Handling
• "You're probably wondering why it's only a dollar to look. Here's exactly why."
• "Three questions everyone asks: is this real, why so cheap, what do I pay later. Let me answer all three now."
• "You don't pick the products blind. The match sheet starts you with lots that already have demand."

Trust / Anti-Guru
• "I won't give you a number. Anyone who gives you a number is lying or about to be sued."
• "If you've been burned, good. You'll read the fine print this time."
• "I don't need your money. The liquidators pay me when your store works. That changes everything."

Procedural
• "Step 1: look at this week's matched lots. Step 2: list them with the template. Step 3: the partner ships when it sells."
• "No guessing. The hardest decision is already made for you."

Small Dream
• "Not quit-your-job money. Stop-doing-math-at-the-pump money."
• "A thing that's yours. A few evenings a week. Steady."

09 — LOSING SCRIPTS (NEGATIVE EXAMPLES)

These are deliberately off-brand and non-compliant. They are included so the system can be taught what NOT to produce. A correct pipeline should never generate anything resembling these, and the quality review should reject them on the cited grounds.

Losing Script 1 — The Income-Claim Disaster.
"What if I told you that you could make $5,000 a month flipping pallets from your couch? Dana did it in her FIRST WEEK with zero experience! Marcus's students are pulling in $300/day on autopilot. This is the easiest passive income on the planet. Spots are almost gone, click now before the timer hits zero!!!"
Why it fails: Invents earnings claims ($5,000/month, $300/day) — banned outright. Fabricates a result for Dana not in the proof bank. Uses "passive," "autopilot," "easiest." Fake urgency timer. All-caps hype. Auto-reject.

Losing Script 2 — The Fabricated-Proof Script.
"Marcus was a Wall Street trader who left to teach reselling. He's got 40,000 students and partnerships with Walmart and Amazon directly. As seen on Forbes and Shark Tank. One student, Greg, turned $100 into a six-figure empire in 90 days."
Why it fails: Fabricates the origin (he was a logistics manager, not a trader), inflates scale (9,400, not 40,000), invents partners (never named in ads, and never Walmart/Amazon), invents media placements and a student "Greg" with an income result. Zero-tolerance failure.

Losing Script 3 — The Off-Voice Hype Script.
"Tired of being broke? It's time to FIRE YOUR BOSS and live the laptop lifestyle! Marcus is handing you the keys to a money-printing machine. Imagine the Lamborghini, the beach, the freedom. Stop being a wage slave. The only thing standing between you and millions is this button."

Why it fails: Pure guru energy, lambo/lifestyle imagery, "fire your boss," "millions" — the opposite of the calm, anti-hype, small-dream voice. Implies an income claim. Auto-reject.

10 — COPY GAPS & COMPLIANCE FLAGS

NHB Gaps That Need Work
• Hopeless under-addressed. Needs more "I was burned AND this was different" proof, not just the mechanism explanation.
• Skepticism-to-trust arc not mapped in testimonials. Need "I was sure it was a scam, then I watched the workshop" process stories.
• Age-diverse proof gap. No member testimonials explicitly 60+, the Hopeless-breaker for Lorraine.
• Low-effort honesty. "A few evenings a week" should be a recurring refrain so no one feels misled later.
• Under-addressed objections: "What makes yours different from the 20 other reseller ads?", "What if the matched lot doesn't sell?", "Am I on my own after I get the match sheet?"

Compliance Hard Rules
• No income or earnings claims, ever. No dollar figures tied to what a member could make. No earnings-based testimonials.
• Never name a specific liquidator partner in ads; refer to "vetted regional partners."
• Do not imply Marcus earns from the member directly; the model is liquidators pay him on movement.
• No hype, guru energy, get-rich-quick language, lambo/mansion imagery.
• Platform policy compliance (Facebook, YouTube, TikTok) at all times.
• Members are called "members," never students or customers.
• Never promise "passive." Always frame as "a few evenings a week."

Competitor Positioning Quick Reference
• Dropshipping gurus: "They make money when you pay. He makes money when the liquidators pay him, only if your store moves product."
• Amazon FBA: "FBA wants capital and months before you know if it works. This caps your downside at a dollar to look."
• Free flip-it content: "Free advice is great if you have 200 hours and no reliable supply. Or you watch one workshop and start with inventory that already has demand."
